Proposal story

Sam Kaipo

Married in October 2007

"Allana and I had known each other for three years. It took a couple of days to plan the proposal, I wanted it to relate to us personally, for it to be memorable, and fit within my small budget. During the Christmas/New Year break I took Allana up north to my home town of Te Kao. I showed her our old homestead and our marae. We love the beach so we made our way up to Spirits Bay where we spent New Year's eve camping with friends. On New Year's morning, before the sun rose, I took her for a walk along the beach. I didn't have a real ring at that stage; I just had a ring-like shell I picked up a month earlier from Waipu beach where we had previously visited. The setting was really beautiful, the beach was empty and our two footprints were the only ones on the sand. The sun was just rising up over the horizon as we walked. I was taking so long trying to build up the courage to ask her we had walked about 1km and Allana was ready to turn back. By then I didn't have a choice. I grabbed her hand, knelt on my one knee and expressed to her how much she meant to me. I asked her to marry me, her reply? 'I guess so', she laughed. The ring didn't fit so she wore it on her pinky finger until we returned home where she could choose her real engagement ring."
